

| Q. No.        | Questions                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| UNIT 1 | SECTION 1                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| 1      | Ravi is a technically talented engineering student who consistently performs well in examinations and project work. He considers academic success to be the most important part of his college life and spends considerable time improving his technical knowledge. However, during group activities, he sometimes ignores the suggestions of his teammates and becomes impatient when their ideas differ from his own. His classmates feel that he values achievement but does not give the same importance to cooperation and respect. After receiving feedback from his faculty mentor, Ravi begins reflecting on the principles that guide his behaviour. He realizes that different people may attach different levels of importance to different values and that values influence how individuals respond to real-life situations. Question: Analyze the situation and explain the major characteristics of human values and how their relative importance can influence individual behaviour. (5 Marks) |
| 2      | Three students are asked to select responsibilities for a major college project. The first student wants freedom to design the project in his own way and explore new ideas. The second student is mainly interested in completing the project successfully and demonstrating his competence before the faculty panel. The third student focuses on ensuring that the project follows established procedures and that the team avoids unnecessary uncertainty or risk. During the discussion, the students realize that their preferences are not random but are connected with what they consider important. Their faculty mentor asks them to identify the motivational goals reflected in their choices. Question: Analyze the three students' motivations with reference to Self-Direction, Achievement and Security. (5 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                            |
| 3      | A software company is preparing to release an application that stores users' personal information. During final testing, one engineer discovers that the application has a security weakness that could expose sensitive data. The project manager argues that delaying the launch could cause financial losses and suggests fixing the problem after release. The engineer believes that users may be harmed if the weakness is ignored. The team discusses professional obligations, privacy, software quality and the possible consequences of releasing the application in its current condition. Finally, the management decides to postpone the launch and correct the security issue. Question: Evaluate the ethical responsibilities of software engineers in this situation. (5 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| 4      | (i) A professional who has always focused on promotions and personal recognition experiences a period of serious reflection after a major personal setback. He begins spending more time understanding his own thoughts and feelings and becomes interested in helping younger colleagues. He also starts spending time in nature and feels that his life is connected to something larger than his individual achievements. Over time, he becomes less concerned about external rewards and more interested in meaningful activities. He reports that these changes have given him a broader perspective and greater purpose. Question Explain how the situation reflects a shift in focus from self to others. (3 Marks) (ii) Mention any two other characteristics of self-transcendence. (2 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                |
| UNIT 1 | SECTION 2                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
|               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

|               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
|---------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 5             | An organization decides to introduce a new workflow that requires employees to learn unfamiliar digital tools. Many employees are concerned because they believe they may not be able to perform effectively during the transition. Some managers simply instruct employees to accept the change, while another manager organizes training programmes and creates opportunities for employees to ask questions. The manager also communicates the reasons for the change, provides support during implementation and recognizes employees who make constructive contributions. Employees gradually become more confident and begin sharing suggestions for improving the new workflow. The organization observes that resistance decreases as employees receive greater understanding and support. Question: Develop an appropriate strategy for fostering openness to change based on the study material. (5 Marks) |
| 6             | A professional has achieved financial security, social recognition and several personal goals. Although these achievements initially gave him satisfaction, he gradually feels that personal success alone does not provide a sufficient sense of meaning. He begins mentoring younger professionals and becomes involved in activities that benefit the wider community. He also develops a stronger interest in reflection, spirituality and experiences that make him feel connected to something larger than himself. His motivation gradually shifts from personal achievement towards broader purposes. He describes this change as moving beyond his earlier concerns about success and recognition. Question: Analyze the situation with reference to the distinction between self-actualization and self-transcendence. (5 Marks)                                                                           |
| 7             | A successful entrepreneur has spent many years focusing primarily on wealth, recognition and professional status. After becoming involved in a community development programme, she begins devoting time to mentoring young entrepreneurs without expecting financial rewards. She becomes increasingly concerned about whether her decisions are beneficial to others and begins reflecting on what constitutes meaningful success. She also describes moments of deep appreciation and wonder when working with the community and nature. Over time, her motivation shifts away from external recognition towards the intrinsic satisfaction of contributing to others. She feels that her understanding of success has changed considerably. Question: Analyze the changes in the entrepreneur's behaviour with reference to the characteristics of self-transcendence. (5 Marks)                                 |
| 8             | (i) A professional has been experiencing dissatisfaction despite achieving several career goals. He decides to spend some time reflecting on his thoughts and feelings and begins maintaining a personal journal. He also practises meditation, spends more time in natural surroundings and explores creative activities that he previously ignored. During this process, he becomes more aware of his personal strengths and weaknesses and begins thinking about a broader purpose in life. He feels that these activities help him move beyond narrow concerns about career success. His mentor encourages him to remain open to experiences that may expand his awareness and sense of connection. Question Explain how the practices described can support self-transcendence. (3 Marks)                                                                                                                       |
|               | (ii) Mention any two practices recommended for developing self-transcendence. (2 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| UNIT 2 | SECTION 1                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| 9             | A college scholarship committee receives applications from students with different financial backgrounds. One committee member proposes giving the scholarship to a student who is personally known to him, even                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

|        |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|--------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|        | though another applicant has greater financial need and satisfies all the published criteria. Other members object because they believe that personal relationships should not influence the allocation of the scholarship. They decide to review the applications using the same criteria for every applicant. The committee also records the reasons for its final decision so that the process remains transparent. The students involved are informed that the scholarship will be awarded according to fair and consistent procedures. Question: Analyze how the situation reflects justice as fairness. (5 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |
| 10     | An engineering student working on a laboratory project discovers that one of the experimental results does not support the expected conclusion. His teammate suggests changing the recorded value because the final report is due the next morning and the group may lose marks. The student refuses to alter the result and explains that the actual observation should be reported even if it produces an unexpected outcome. He checks the experiment again, records the observations accurately and informs the faculty member about the difficulty. The faculty member appreciates the student's decision and asks the group to discuss what could have caused the unexpected result. The experience makes the team understand that professional honesty is more important than obtaining a convenient result. Question: Analyze the different dimensions of honesty demonstrated in the situation. (5 Marks) |
| 11     | A project leader promises the client that the software team will complete a major module by a particular date. During development, the team encounters an unexpected technical problem that makes the original deadline difficult to meet. Instead of hiding the problem, the leader informs the client, explains the reason for the delay and provides a revised schedule. He also accepts responsibility for the team's performance and ensures that the team continues working according to professional standards. Although the client is initially disappointed, the transparent communication increases confidence in the project team. The team learns that maintaining trust sometimes requires admitting difficulties rather than presenting misleading information. Question: Analyze how trustworthiness contributes to professional relationships. (5 Marks)                                           |
| 12     | (i) A student selection committee must choose candidates for a leadership programme. Two candidates have similar academic performance, but one candidate is related to a committee member. The member privately suggests selecting the relative because it would be personally convenient. Other committee members insist that the same selection criteria must be applied to everyone. They decide to remove personal relationships from the decision-making process and document the reasons for the final selection. The committee wants every applicant to feel that the process has been fair and impartial. Question Explain the relevance of fairness in this situation. (3 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
|        | (ii) Mention two areas that justice is concerned with. (2 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
| UNIT 2 | SECTION 2                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| 13     | A residential community has several elderly residents who rarely interact with others because they live alone. A youth group begins visiting them regularly, listening to their concerns and assisting with small tasks. Initially, some residents are hesitant to accept help because they do not want to appear dependent. The volunteers continue their support respectfully without forcing anyone to participate. Over time, the elderly residents become more comfortable interacting with the volunteers and begin participating in community activities. The community notices that relationships among residents have become warmer and more cooperative. Question: Evaluate how compassion can contribute to fraternity, harmony and community well-being.                                                                                                                                                      |

|               |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
|---------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
|               | (5 Marks)                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| 14     | A college announces that all students are technically free to participate in an international innovation competition. However, some students cannot participate because they lack access to the required software, internet facilities and financial resources. Other students have access to all these facilities and can prepare easily. A student argues that simply declaring everyone free to participate does not create equal practical opportunities. The college considers providing common facilities and financial support so that students can participate meaningfully. The administration asks students to examine freedom not only as the absence of restrictions but also in relation to the capabilities required to exercise it. Question: Evaluate the significance of Amartya Sen's Capability Approach in the situation. (5 Marks) |
| 15     | A municipal authority is responsible for distributing essential services across several neighbourhoods. One neighbourhood has historically received better facilities because its residents have greater political influence. A new administrative team reviews the distribution and discovers that another neighbourhood has greater need but receives fewer resources. The team decides to examine the social structure and the procedures through which rights, duties and advantages are allocated. It proposes a system based on consistent principles rather than political influence. Community representatives are invited to discuss whether the proposed system treats different groups fairly. Question: Analyze the role of social institutions in promoting justice. (5 Marks)                                                             |
| 16     | (i) A student sees a dramatic video online claiming that a new government policy has already been implemented. He is about to forward it to his class group because the information seems important. Another student checks the source, compares it with reliable reports and discovers that the video contains misleading information. The students discuss how social-media users can unintentionally spread false information. They decide that important claims should be verified before being shared. Their faculty member explains that digital literacy is increasingly important for responsible communication. Question Explain the role of digital literacy in supporting truthfulness. (3 Marks) (ii) Mention two digital challenges to truthfulness. (2 Marks)                                                               |
| UNIT 3 | SECTION 1                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| 17     | Two members of a project team disagree strongly about the design of their prototype. Initially, both students interrupt one another and refuse to consider the other's suggestions. The team leader asks them to communicate their concerns calmly and listen to each other's reasoning. Each student begins understanding the other's viewpoint and acknowledges that both suggestions contain useful elements. They agree on a modified design and decide not to continue the disagreement after reaching a solution. The team leader explains that communication, empathy, conflict resolution, respect and forgiveness are important for maintaining harmonious relationships. Question: Analyze the role of interpersonal harmony in resolving the conflict. (5 Marks)                                                                             |
| 18     | A student constantly compares his academic performance, appearance and communication skills with those of his classmates. He begins believing that he is not good enough and avoids participating in activities in which he may be judged. During a mentoring programme, he starts identifying his actual strengths and weaknesses rather than relying on comparisons. He learns to recognize negative self-talk and replaces it with realistic and positive statements. He also begins accepting that making mistakes is a normal part of learning. Over time, his confidence improves and he becomes more willing to participate in academic and social activities. Question: Analyze how self-awareness and self-acceptance contribute to embracing the self. (5 Marks)                                                                              |

|    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|----|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 19 | Scenario: A student repeatedly tells himself that he will fail whenever he receives a difficult assignment. Because of this negative self-talk, he avoids attempting challenging tasks and becomes increasingly anxious. During a self-development programme, he learns mindfulness techniques and begins observing his thoughts without immediately accepting them as facts. He replaces statements such as "I cannot do this" with realistic statements such as "I can learn this step by step." He also uses deep breathing and meditation before beginning difficult tasks. Gradually, he becomes more confident and willing to face academic challenges. Question: Analyze how mindfulness and positive self-talk can support the process of embracing self. (5 Marks) |
| 20 | (i) A family earns a moderate income but carefully identifies what physical facilities it actually needs. The family maintains sufficient resources and is also able to support relatives when necessary. Another family earns much more but constantly feels deprived because it keeps comparing its possessions with those of others. Both families discuss whether having more money automatically means greater prosperity. They realize that physical facilities and the feeling of prosperity are not identical. The discussion helps them understand the importance of need assessment. Question Explain the meaning of prosperity. (3 Marks) (ii) Mention the two requirements for prosperity. (2 Marks)                   |
|    |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |